

Our class's visit to the Mississippi Children's Museum was very grand. It started out when Chris read his sensational Hometown Hero Essay. Then we were walked to the banner that was covering the new museum. Soon my ears started picking up noise from people counting back from three. 3....2.....1 I heard. All of the class broke through the barrier and got the amazing first look at the gorgeous museum.

Once we were downstairs, I couldn't believe my eyes. It was like a kid's wonderland. First, I went through the gross, yet fun Gastro Climber where you can take a trip through the digestive system. Then, I went down the fast slide in the Shrimp Boat that leads to an underwater deck. Soon after that I went to the Volcano Room which has many tunnels that lead to other parts of the volcano. Next, I went to the Engineering Energy Station where you can fill up a life-size car with gas and many other enjoyable things. Last but not least, I went to the "dangerous" Lumber Yard where you can actually use a crane to pick up wood.

As you can see, this was a very amazing field trip. I hope this has persuaded you to go. I guarantee you will have just as much fun as me, if not more. Remember, this is a once in a lifetime opportunity.
