

The Ceremony

“We’re finally here!” I exclaimed as I approached the world’s greatest children’s museum, The Mississippi Children’s Museum. Chris Hart, a student in our class, won us the trip by winning an essay contest. So, we sat, and sat, and sat through the longest ceremony EVER. It was pretty chilly outside, so I was COLD. Then Chris read his essay. Next something BIG happened.

Spotlight

Paula Kemp, a person who spoke at the ceremony, said, “We welcome Mrs. Angie Awad’s 5th grade class to “unwrap” the museum!” They had set a gigantic painting with a bow on a wooden frame for us to tear and then run inside the museum! So, we all ripped and tore and then ran inside. I was in total shock of the sight I saw. There were millions of activities. Three out of a million I did were the Gastro Climber, where you go through the digestive system by being guided through tunnels and slides. Another would be the Hodge Podge Construction Site where you use a crane to build walls and houses. Last but not least, the Water Works. That is where you turn knobs and go through tunnels and domes to work the contraption.

Time To Leave

Then we ate lunch and it was time to go. I hope I have persuaded you to come visit the Mississippi Children’s Museum sometime soon. I loved it!
