

Yesterday we took a trip to the Mississippi Children's Museum. Chris had won a writing contest which allowed the whole class to be the first into the museum! We ran off the bus and sat through a long ceremony. We were introduced and we stood up to wave. Chris read his essay, then we busted through the doors. We ran in and played.

I didn't know what to do! The place was so huge! The first thing I noticed was the lights! On the ceiling, on the floor, they were everywhere! The class ran down the stairs and began to scatter around. I went to the health and fitness center. Then I went to the Between the Lions book place. Afterwards I went to the painting center where I painted vivid and stunning pictures. In there, there were no limits. I could even paint with my hands! You may want to go just for that! The next place I went was the toilet bowl. I crawled in, was eaten, learned about the digestive system, and was flushed into a toilet! It was so much fun! I walked over to the farmhouse where I milked a cow. I squeezed and pulled and stuff really came out! It was awesome even though only water came out. I had a blast!

From all the things I've told you, you may want to go yourself. It would be especially great if you have kids. You will have a great time if you go!
